

I am currently a very happy user of 100% biodiesel. I have a concern for my environment, and wish to make a difference. However, recently at the only fuel station that I can purchase 100% biodiesel fuel, I have learnt of a proposal by government to put a limit of biodiesel fuel of only 5% and 95% fossil fuel. If this government is serious about reducing greenhouse emissions then why is this proposal even being considered?

E85 – Where is it in Australia. How long do we want to wait to introduce a fuel that impacts favourably on our environment immediately.

Please lets not lose sight of what is important here. This government promised to work harder on our environment issues. We pay through the roof for fossil fuel, for an inferior product that is a cancer to our environment. I want to make a difference, for my children, my grandchildren and for the future our planet. Does the government?

A truly concerned citizen
